Pete and Jill's trip to Greece Spring 2006

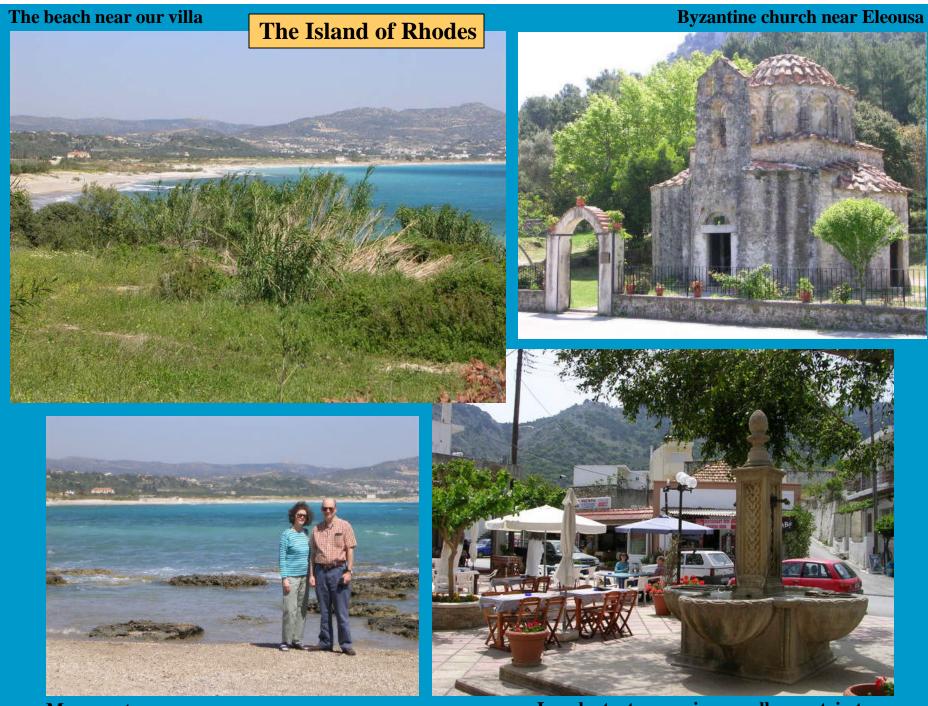

Wildflowers on Rhodes

Erechtheion, in the Acropolis of Athens

My parents

Lunch at a taverna in a small mountain town

Solar water heater on roof

Villa in Rhodes

Villa Dimitris, located in the small town of Kolymbia. It has 4 bedrooms and 10 porches. We were there with my parents and Pete's friend Jim.

Colorful décor

Kitchen

Pete and Jim at work in dining room (living room is behind and below)

Villa grounds

Citrus, olive, quince, fig, and date trees

We hadn't expected the property of the villa to be so large (about 3 acres) and nicely landscaped. The gardener came every day. Not shown here are the hammock, the outdoor grilling area, and the cactus & succulent bed. There is one iron gate at the head of the walkway and one at the entrance to the driveway. The car shown (distantly) in the photo on the far left is the one my folks and I rented. Pete and Jim rented a second car to get to their conference.

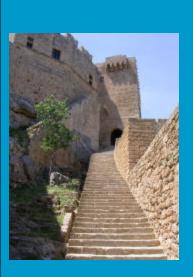

Next to the property is a small hotel, but nobody was staying there yet when we were there, so it was nice and quiet.

A view down from the top

In the Acropolis

A view down on the town of Lindos

My mom and I rode donkeys up

Cats were everywhere

Old Town of Rhodes

This is the largest inhabited medieval city in Europe

Lots of little alleyways used by pedestrians and scooters

Plateia Ippokratous

A dry moat surrounds old town

Palace of the Grand Master, with mosaic floors

Hora, the main town, where the ferry port is

In the old section (Kastro) of Hora

The Island of Naxos

After Rhodes, and one night on Kalymnos (mainly just a ferry layover for us), we spent 4 nights on Naxos. We stayed in the small town of Kastraki about 8 miles south of Hora. Our studios, pictured at left, had kitchenettes, so we cooked our own dinners. Pete and I rented a car and went sightseeing around the island each day. Jim rented a motorbike and went out on his own. That sounded fun, but it was overcast and breezy and never very warm so he always came back cold, and I was glad that we hadn't rented a motorbike ourselves. As on Rhodes, the main tourist season hadn't yet begun so the activity we saw in town was mainly that of locals, and the beaches and other sites were not at all busy.

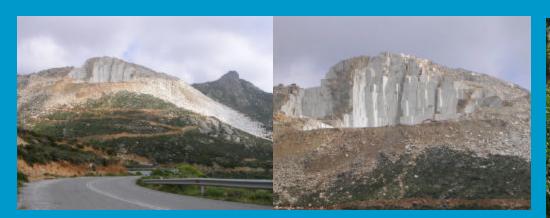

Naxos has been inhabited since Neolithic times. The mountainous land is terraced for planting. Walking paths are everywhere, as are stone walls and countless tiny white churches with blue domes.

Two views of a hilltop marble quarry

Naxos Marble

Marble building in Apiranthos

Small cemetery in Ano Potamia

We'd noticed that the cemeteries were full. with well-kept marble tombs dating back only to the 1980s. At the cemetery above, we noticed a pit at the back (you can just make out the hole in the photo). If you want to see the skulls and bones that were in it, exit the slide show (there's one more slide) and enlarge the tiny photo in the upper right corner.

On the island of Symi, near Rhodes, as seen from ferry

Temple of Hephaestus in Athens

Last Slide

One afternoon and night in Athens was enough. Beyond its ancient sites, it's not a scenic city. Most of what is currently there has been built since the 1830's. The Turkish quarter was interesting to walk through.

Ruins of a small tower on the coast of Naxos

Me in the the above ruins